

TRU Community Care offers compassionate care for terminally ill infants, children, and adolescents that's designed to help not only your patients, but also their loved ones, live each day to the fullest.

We know that children aren't simply little adults. That's why our medical professionals have received special training in pediatric hospice care. They're experts in controlling pain and physical symptoms, and skilled at addressing the emotional and spiritual needs of everyone in the family.

Comfort for your patients:

- Terminally ill infants, children, or adolescents can spend their remaining time in comfort, surrounded by family, in the familiar and safe environment of home
- Children's pain and symptoms can be managed and their families' needs can be addressed so that quality of life is enhanced for all
- Continuous care can be provided at home in crisis situations without moving the patient to another location

Support for the family:

- Families receive support and education as they navigate a challenging road. Siblings are an integral part of each plan of care, so their needs don't go unrecognized
- Patient and family are guided in making the best decisions possible for whatever time they have remaining, with their choices and beliefs honored every step of the way

Grief support:

Grief support is available for families after a death, whether or not their loved one was on TRU Hospice service.

- Healing Circles support groups, including Healing with Horses
- Camp Erin, a free grief camp for children and teens who have lost someone they love
